

German Level A1 Roadmap

German A1 Level:

The A1 level is the beginner level in German language learning, according to the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages (CEFR). At this level, you will be able to:

Understand:

Simple, everyday phrases and expressions: These include familiar greetings, introductions, and basic questions and answers.

High-frequency vocabulary: This includes words and phrases related to personal information, your immediate environment, and familiar topics like family, shopping, and work.

Short, slow, and clear speech: This includes simple instructions, announcements, and everyday conversations.

Speak:

Engage in simple conversations: You can introduce yourself and ask and answer basic questions about your personal background, family, and daily life.

Use basic phrases and sentences to describe yourself and your surroundings: This includes expressing your needs and preferences, asking for things, and giving simple descriptions of people, places, and objects.

Interact in a simple way: You can exchange basic information on familiar topics, but you may need help with more complex matters.

Write:

Write short, simple texts: This includes personal information, basic descriptions, and short messages.

Write common expressions and phrases: This includes greetings, introductions, and basic questions and answers.
